Lewis Speech Sunday Opens Week-Long Violence Conference

The week of October 19 will be one of discussion and speakers relating to questions of violence and social change. The prime movers behind the week's activities are the Campus Christian Association (CCA) and the Current Issues Committee (CIC).

The organizations have assembled a group of speakers which include Rev. Dean Lewis, Secretary of the Church and Society Committee of the United Presbyterian Church, Dr. Sweazy, Moderator of the Church's General Assembly, Louis Nyaradi, the Current Director of International Studies at Bradley University, and Louis Lomax, an authority in Afro-American studies.

The impetus behind the conference is a concern for examining an issue in greater depth than has been done in the past with a lack of continuity between different organizations. Bruce Bacon of the CIC and Bob Brashear addressed themselves, to this problem last spring and began coordinating a series of events related to the very current topic.

"In the future," notes Brashear, "if this is successful we hope to concentrate on a single issue for a period of time. In the past its been too much of a shot-gun affair." This year the CCA has not planned a lecture series, but instead hopes to follow the issue approach in co-ordination with various groups on the campus.

Speaking in Westminster Church on Sunday will be Rev. Dean Lewis. Lewis recently published a report on education "as a liberating process," a report dealing with the deficiencies of American public education. He will take part in a discussion in the "pit" at 3 p.m., and will be followed by a discussion lead by Bob Bonthius representing SAC, the Student Action Committee.

On Wednesday, a noon lecture will deal with "Violence on Campuses." At 7:30 p.m., the movie "No Game" will be presented.

Thursday, Dr. Sweazy will be the Chapel speaker, discussing the Black Manifesto and its implications for the church. That evening, Nicholas Nyaradi will speak on the topic "It isn't easy to be an American" at 8 p.m. in Severance (Old Gym).

An expert on the Soviet Union and former Minister of Finance of Hungary, Dr. Nicholas Nyaradi, will speak Thursday Oct. 23 at 8:15 p.m. in Severance (Old Gym).

Before Soviet pressure forced him to flee his native Hungary, Dr. Nyaradi was an active member of the post World War II government.

At the request of the anti-Communist Small Landholder's Party, he served first as Under Secretary of the Treasury and then as Minister of Finance.

Dr. Nyaradi's duties took him to Moscow on a seven month diplomatic mission, and during the negotiations he came to know personally most of the past and present leaders of the USSR.

His book on the mission, "My Ringside Seat In Moscow" has been acclaimed by leading reviewers as one of the best books ever published on Russia.

Dr. Nyaradi's speech Thursday will draw on his knowledge of the Soviet Union, as well as his considerable experience as an American educator — he is currently director of International Studies at Bradley University. His topic will be "It Isn't Easy to Be An American." A discussion will follow the lecture and admission is free.

LOUIS LOMAX

Louis Lomax will conclude the week on Friday, speaking at 4:00 in Severance on the topic, "Two Revolutions: Youth and Race."

Lomax is the author of several books on current racial matters and notable lecturer in the areas of Afro-American history, culture and sociological analysis. "The Negro in Revolt" has won him acclaim in his field.

Drushal Introduces Intellectual Theme For This School Year

President Drushal has introduced an intellectual theme for the academic year, "Community in a Fractured World."

First announced in his convocation address, Drushal's idea has taken shape through the work of a committee, comprised of seven students and faculty members, which met last week to coordinate speakers and events around the theme.

The title "Community in a Fractured World" crystallized over the summer from consideration of roughly half a dozen possibilities. The president hopes "...that we keep this (theme) in mind as we think of classes, the world and events going on around us."

Explaining what he considers to be a near-ideal community Drushal noted two key points. First, the achievement of a high level of consensus. "Community," he said, "has common goals. . . important in these is an understanding of its heritage and being able to achieve a high level of agreement on critical issues." Secondly, is the resolution of conflict in a peaceful manner.

Commenting on the importance of channels, Drushal pointed to the increasingly important role which the Campus Council will play as it gains experience. In the interim period other channels such as ad hoc committees and meetings will play a significant role.

Looking into the programs for the year Drushal plans to view the theme from all sides; to question different kinds of community; is community possible in the Middle East, how about the United Nations?

Conferences will play an important role in this area. Two in January are especially noteworthy: the Campus Conference and Alumni Day. Alumni Day will be Midwest patterned after last years presidents conference and will take place at the Palmer House in Chicago, enlisting student and faculty representatives in addition to administrators.

WOOSTER'S LOCKED UP dorms focus the issues in the College's housing problems.

Grandell, SGA Housing Committee Working For Diversified Dorms

The first meeting of the Permanent SGA Housing Committee plowed full steam ahead, opening with the assumption stated by Claudia Elferdink that "There is going to be a change in housing; this group is working to know what will be the most realistic way of bringing this change about."

The group of about 15 students, Deans Doris Coster, Howard King, Shirley Plummer and David Moldstad of the English Department centered discussion around a proposal submitted by Elferdink.

Based on the Clause 16 of the new curriculum (referred to as the "do your own thing" clause) which allows a student to draw up his own educational plan, the proposal reads: "Any residence hall which would like to implement an alternated plan for that particular hall may do so by completing the following procedure." The statement goes on to suggest that a group of residents propose a detailed plan for their hall which would be voted on by all persons living of that dorm and sent, with 75% approval, to a screening committee and then to Campus Council.

The committee discussed the possibilities for immediate passage of some sort of open dorm policy. It was decided that, since Campus

Council might feel more comfortable working with a specific plan, the Elferdink proposal, which embodies the general principal of diversified housing, be coupled with open dorm proposal from Grandell House. This joint plan, the committee felt, would have a better chance for passage than an open ended theory which might get bogged down in Council discussion.

The Housing Committee meeting was followed later that night by a meeting of all residents of Grandell House. While that meeting did not come up with a drawn proposal, the members of the house did reach decisions which will be included in a Grandell proposal soon to go to Campus Council.

It was unanimously decided that an open dorm policy be suggested but with a special understanding made concerning supervision. The members of the dorm felt they did not want to promise responsibility in upholding restrictions they did not believe in. Therefore, the proposal will be drawn with the stipulations for adherence to the plan agreed upon by the house.

Grandell residents agreed that a house that works as a family commands and receives far more responsibility than one dependent upon strictly defined regulations.

Residents Request Sexual Conduct Code Revision

Sunday night, a small group of Residents, members of Campus Council and Administrators met to discuss a re-evaluation of the College social standard. The meeting was organized by a group of five residents who were particularly disturbed by the College rationale for the standard for sexual conduct as well as its inconsistency with other College standards.

The group had prepared a rough draft of a social standard to serve as the basis of discussion. The statement expressed the College's concern for the total environment, education, and personal growth of the student, as well as expressing the hope of instilling in each individual of the Community a sensitivity and respect for the rights and individual growth of others. The Residents felt that the most important part of the draft expressed the College's concern to help in the development of a self-directed student by establishing certain guidelines within which students set their own standards.

Because the community is so intensely involved with the individual growth of each student, the proposed judicial system would include members from all elements of the Community — students, faculty, administrators. The statement includes no rules or structures. It was merely a rationale for the changed social standard desired by the group of Residents.

The group hoped that a similar statement of their rough draft would serve as the basis upon which a complete re-evaluation and rewording of the College standards would take place. The discussion of the statement raised many good questions that will have to be considered before a final proposal is made. Should the College prepare students for society like it is, or should it prepare students for society like it should be? Can the Residents be both a counselor and disciplinarian? Can there be consistency in such a system? The discussion suggested possibilities for autonomous living units. Those present at the meeting realized the potentials of such a proposal as well as the important decisions that had to be made as a result of the questions that it raised.

Another meeting will be held. All Residents and any concerned students are urged to attend. Information about the time and meeting place will be sent to Residents. Interested students should contact them. Hopefully the next meeting will be a working session that will give some positive direction to what seems to be a strong sentiment for changing the College social standard.

THOUGH DEFEATED, THE Scots did have intent support at Saturday's Homecoming game.

Beginning The End

At last, the beginning of the end — is the way most students supporting the Moratorium are looking at October 15th's efforts against the war. It is bigger and better organized than last year's Easter marches in various cities, which is a hopeful sign that the peace movement is growing.

It is the beginning because Moratoriums are scheduled to continue monthly until the war is ended; and in that sight of an end, lies the hope. It is the first people's effort that has had a direct connection with the end of the war.

The hope is a little like the enthusiasm felt during the McCarthy and Robert Kennedy campaigns though strengthened by things learned from the disappointment of those campaigns, and by the support growing in every age and occupation.

At Wooster, more hope for peace was felt last week than during last spring's Militarism Day, which seemed an isolated articulation of concern. Attendance was encouraging at last Wednesday's speeches, discussions and films. Applause was lively and there were even standing ovations. Participation in the community "leafletting," the most out-reaching event of the day, was surprisingly strong.

And those who continue to hope continue to plan. Every student and faculty member who took part in Wednesday's events already felt a commitment to peace, and the Moratorium acted to strengthen that. The November 15th Moratorium in Washington will be a call for the participation of every person who feels a commitment to peace. — R. M.

On Honor Code

To the editor:

For that which I am about to write, I would like to have a very clear introduction in explanation of why I am writing this. The topic of the Academic Honor Code on the campus of Wooster is being treated from all angles, from all sides, students, faculty, and administration, with respect, with disrespect, with apprehension, and with indifference by a majority of students. But from all that has been said and done on the matter of having a code and living by it, there seems to be a huge flaw or flaws either in the ideals behind the code or in the application of it.

I can substantiate this with facts and testimonies on events which took place last spring. The fact that there is a flaw is agreed upon by most people. The basis for having a code is that exams should be unproctored and academic honesty should be left up to the individual students. Well. Does the flaw exist within these ideals behind the code? I should hardly think so. Eighty-five per cent of the school last spring voted on keeping the code, and all but a few students this year who at first refused to sign, eventually signed the card in acceptance of the code. But, I would further add that the signing of the cards was in agreement with the ideals of the code, and only perhaps a signing in agreement with it's application. I use the word perhaps because no one really knows how he is going to act in a situation in which he has had no personal experience. Every student will agree to that. The real situations are never like the hypothetical situations, pre-thought-out to explain how the code works and is applied. Therefore let us say that the ideals are fine, but that the application is a disaster.

So I wish to examine the application. Now. There are two parts concerning the application of the code. The first part is the responsibility each individual has in turning himself in to the Honor Board if and when he causes an infraction of the code. There will be people who will never cheat, and there is no conflict here. There will be people who, having cheated, will turn themselves in under their own initiative, because they feel that their signature on a slip of paper means more to them than the few extra points on an exam. These people will be dealing directly with the board in order to cover the infraction, and there seems to be no conflict or friction here also. Then there is the person who, on cheating, will not turn himself in.

This situation then deals with the second part of the application: the part where another student takes on the responsibility of turning the person in for cheating. This situation holds the present flaw in the Honor Code, for there exists a third party other than the defendant and the court, and separate from the defendant and the court. The individual who does the reporting of the infraction is the third party, the policeman carrying-out the order of the code, and the witness, giving factual evidence, and therefore acting impartially. The above practice is employed in all of the courts in the U. S. and it is supposedly the best form of democratic court law that we know of. However, as seen by last spring's fiasco, very few students enjoy being, or are willing to be the third party in the case of cheating when it arises.

But why?? Is it some part of human nature which gives people an aversion for being the fink, the rat, the goody-goody-straight-arrow, or whatever? Or is it part of the seemingly perpetual conflict between the "individual" and the systems"? These questions are directly related, often through individual and social pressure. The answers to both questions is 'yes.'

Letters To The Editor

The Damoclean Draft

To the editor:

One must be aware, when reading over the proposed legislation, that he not be overly joyful. For the above, however, is only PROPOSED, it is not in fact law, indeed it may never be. Further this is only a change in the draft law: inequities and injustices will merely be changed with the proposal, they will not disappear. Notice for instance that college students will still be favored, and that graduate students would be guaranteed a full year deferment: thus the nation's poor would still bear the brunt of the draft calls. But even more serious than the continued inequity of the law would be the fact that the Selective Service System would not be fundamentally, structurally changed: deferments would still be used as clubs to channel (as SS term) men into areas deemed in the national interest; local boards would still be able to wield discriminate, inequitable and even illegal power; national standards for deferments and local board conduct would not be instituted; young men would still have to face federal criminal convictions for disputing classifications; etc., etc.

Nixon's proposals are still far from being satisfactory reform: they are merely sufficing for fundamental change, they are remedial steps aimed at reviving an illegal and unconstitutional system. The only real reform that Nixon could offer would be abolition of the Selective Service System as it stands, and institution of a volunteer army.

Senator Mark Hatfield (R-Ore.) has introduced the "Voluntary Military Manpower Procurement Act of 1969", S. 503, into the Senate. His bill was co-sponsored by Senators Cook (R-Ky.), Dole (R-Kans.), Goldwater (R-Ariz.), McGovern (D-SD), Nelson (D-Wisc.), Packwood (R-Ore.), Prouty (R-Vt.), and Schweiker (R-Pa.). The bill provides for:

— An increase in basic military pay of $100 per month. (note: enlisted men now receive pay well BELOW the federal minimum wage.)

— Improved and expanded programs of training, promotion, education, re-enlistment bonuses, recreation and other actions for upgrading the conditions and statuses of military service.

— Continuation of the present registration under the Selective Act.

— Termination of inductions six months following the date of enactment.

— Reinstitution of involuntary inductions by action of Congress upon notification of the President that the voluntary system is not meeting military needs. (note: such a notification could well lead to Congressional debate on the needs of the military.)

— Establishment of a Joint Committee of Congress on the Improvement of the Ready Reserve and the National Guard.

Senator Scott (R-Pa.) has introduced Senate Bill S. 781, to establish a Commission on Voluntary Military Service appointed by the President to conduct a study on the feasibility of a voluntary program of enlistments.

With three members of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Senators Goldwater, Schweiker, and Young, supporting the concept of voluntary enlistments, and both Republican and Democratic Senate Whips, Senators Scott and Kennedy proposing legislation on the draft, it would seem likely that Senator Stennis would hold Committee hearings on the draft sometime in 1969.

It is to be hoped that the abolition of the draft is at hand; yet until then it may be likely that Congress will act on Nixon's remedial proposals. But today the threat of involuntary servitude, disguised as induction, still hangs over all young men. "Citizens should take a hard look at the draft and ponder its significance and implications for our country. . . During most of American history, conscription has been considered alien to American principles of freedom." (from The Draft?, by American Friends Service Committee, published by: Hill and Wang).

BOB BONTHIUS

The Elusive Antidote

To the editor:

"Today there is no peace, no universal peace, no stable and secure peace, no just peace, no peace which permits human beings to concentrate on solving the basic problems and exploiting the magnificent opportunities which confront them in their quest for the good life."

This statement comes from the book, "Strengthening the United Nations." But to me its significance is that if it were not true, there would be no war in Vietnam. To put it another way this statement describes a disease. The war in Vietnam is only one of its symptom. Other signs of this disease are the ABM, Anti-US demonstrations throughout the world, the Middle East conflict, and the like. It is said that a disease can not be cured by treating its symptoms. One must find the cause and then search for something to counter it.

I, myself believe that until this cause and an antidote for it is found, there will continue to be wars like the present one. When this discovery occurs it will indeed be, "One giant step for all mankind."

How Lightfoot Struck Again

To the Editor:

Every issue of the Wooster Voice contains the statement that "opinions expressed in editorials and features are those of the community." It is agreed that a unanimous opinion is unobtainable in a college community, but we doubt that the majority of Wooster students reacted to the Gordon Lightfoot concert in the same fashion as John Taylor.

The headline for Mr. Taylor's review as "Wooster-Lightfoot Encounter Has Varied Reactions." However, Mr. Taylor concludes his article by admitting that because the crowd enjoyed the concert it was successful. This contradicts his first sentence in which he states that the concert "was a bomb." Therefore, it appears to us that the only variance in reaction was between Mr. Taylor and the rest of the audience. If the Voice prints "community" opinions this would seem to be a breach of editorial policy. Why is Mr. Taylor's opinion (obviously in the minority of Wooster student opinion) so prominently displayed?

How can Mr. Taylor assert that the concert "was a bomb" after he describes Gordon Lightfoot's voice as "pleasant," after stating that he sang "only one bad song," and after describing him as a "very good writer" and "good singer of the right type of song?" In other words, Mr. Taylor's only criticism of Mr. Lightfoot is his jokes. Certainly bad jokes are not enough of a reason to justify Mr. Taylor's comment that Gordon Lightfoot's performance was "the worst show I've ever seen a professional put on."

We also resent the photography printed with the article. The caption reads: "Audience reactions vary during Gordon Lightfoot concert." This photograph was taken near the end of a half-hour intermission and not during the concert. We dare say the same reactions of boredom would have been registered at half-time of an exciting basketball game.

We find it hard to respect Mr. Taylor's opinions when his radio show is filled with good songs which are well-written and pleasantly sung, between which he mumbles incoherently. At least we could understand what Gordon Lightfoot said.

Honeywell Vs. Sweat Glands

To the Editor:

Did you know that the Honeywell Company's engineers are responsible, and I mean solely responsible, for the thermostatic regulation of the major buildings on this campus? Amazing! Or is it? I mean you could be freezing and I could be steaming in the library or the Union and neither one of us, or any of us would be very comfortable. Isn't it strange that the College can not control a system that controls us! And I had the nerve to blame the College for the mal-adjustment of my messed-up body temperature! My humblest apologies to those concerned.

Of course, the Honeywell engineers are an important constituency at this College, for without them our buildings would not be "thermostatically" controlled. But what leaves me not a little piqued, at times, is their arbitrariness with the C.O.W. student. It bothers me that Honeywell can hold such a tight monopoly on the cooling and heating systems of this campus! Do the rest of us not count?

It is time this College banded together on one issue.

Allowing for the fact that many, including myself, may not be completely aware of the danger that the Honeywell monster could have on the delicate operation of our sweat glands, petitions of redress might only aggravate the problem which, day by day, is growing more and more complex. Instead, I propose to set up a committee to investigate the committee responsible for Honeywell. Only through this kind of constructive action can we hope to make the heating and cooling systems more relevant to the hot-and-cold-blooded students who use our buildings.

This could very well be the time to register our rights to dissent through the necessary channels. Let's all bear in mind, however, that the exercise of these rights hinges on this academic community's commitment "to the resolution of these differences through discussion and the mutual development of ideas." (College of Wooster: The Right to Dissent) Our rights to a share in the thermostatic control of this College must be recognized. Remember: it could be a COLD winter or a HOT summer!!

MORATORIUM

By MARY KAY McMAHON
and AL UNGER

Students acted as citizens and citizens identified with students Wednesday as the meaning of patriotism is truly tested in a nationwide Moratorium.

At Wooster, the idea of a peace observance that started on campuses and spread to Wall Street and beyond, was realized with a day set aside for discussion and thought. Many Woosterites departed from "business as usual" to participate in a program of speakers, discussions, theater, and "leafletting" of the town.

Dr. Nels Ferre of the Philosophy Department opened Wednesday mornings activities with the thought that the Vietnamese War cannot be isolated from war in general. He stated that war, historically, has never been a solution to man's problems. To "overcome Communism in South Vietnam," Ferre feels we must offer people more than they offer; and that realistically this will probably be a combination of the best Christianity and the best of Communism.

He gave three reasons why war is wrong in Vietnam: "The United States should not try to be the policeman of the world; we are destroying the people we are supposed to be saving; the war is not conquering totalitarianism, but increasing it."

The growth of all of us into "universal human beings" should be our prime objective. "The day of sovereignty of individual nations is gone. We must say my country as far as it is in alignment with other nations." Our withdrawal from Vietnam will not dishonor us as a nation, but will win respect from the world. Ferre concluded with a feeling that this nation must raise a "common clamor against the war and begin setting right that which is wrong."

A Knife in the Back

Dr. Daniel Calhoun stressed to his listeners the absurdity of the war. The nation whose people are having difficulty breathing their air, drinking their water, has dumped a "catastrophic amount" on a small peasant nation trying to determine their own political destiny.

Nixon has had nine months in which to fulfill his campaign promise of finding a way to end the war. Said Calhoun, "The gestation period of an idea shouldn't take any longer than the period of a man... now we want to look at the baby!"

Calhoun pointed out that the administration is supporting South Vietnam's Thieu, a man who keeps in prison his opponent in the last election, one who was anti-Communist along with 40,000 others who do not agree with South Vietnam's "democratic government." And this is the man that Nixon calls one of the four or five best politicians in the world?

He then asks his growing audience, "How many Vietnamese fought in our Civil War?" He went on to note that it costs the United States one-quarter of a million dollars to kill every Vietnamese person at a $18 million a day.

Comparing America's involvement in the war to a stabbing, Calhoun said, "He sticks a knife in your back, then asks would you like to discuss your dilemma?" In Mr. Nixon's case, he withdraws it one inch and says, "Now we've made our concessions, what are yours?"

Dr. Calhoun commented about Vice President Agnew's statement that opposition to the administration's stand on the war "is treason." He said, "If that is treason, it would be treason to the truth to do anything less."

Sue Morgan, Bob Dunsmore, and Phil Travena then presented a short play depicting the oppression in a man's life concerning his non-conventional views on the draft, killing, and meaning to life.

From the Point to Prison

David Clark, who went from West Point to Leavenworth Prison in four years, was the mornings' final speaker. He entered the U. S. Military Academy in 1964. While working as a poor peoples worker in West Virginia, he was informed by the Army that his work was not in the national interest. "I informed the Army of my feelings, and they informed me that they had put me on active duty." Clark was then told to take his feelings to the following: A psychiatrist, a doctor, a court martial, a stockade, then to prison. Clark expressed the very real feelings that for him, it was no longer talking about the rotten situation other people were in, because, "the hammer was falling on my head. And it had to become a living thing to me—no more rhetoric: I believe in this or that. It was no longer a cause of a movement. It was me and everybody around me. You have to stop thinking about it and start living it."

The somber rhythm of a tambourine started and dancers began a solemn procession around a Vietnamese whore who approached four men: A businessman, a South Vietnamese soldier, a College of Wooster student, and an American Army officer. They symbolically used and wounded her until she died, with all four men and dancers watching. A mourning dance followed and the dead woman, meant to represent all of dying Vietnam, was carried out.

A two-hour panel of faculty members — J. Arthur Baird, William Chambers (Economics) and James Hodges (History) — brought a controversy on positions of peace to the afternoon audience. Chambers discussed the immorality of the war, Hodges, the expense, while Baird disagreed with both, citing their positions as those of creeping humanism and not of Christianity. (Ed. note: See Letter to the Editor from Harold Smith.)

Vietnam: Love It or Leave It

The evening speakers included Rev. Raymond Swartzback, who brought forth a variety of facts concerning the war: 360,000 acres of lush South Vietnamese land has been defoliated by napalm bombs; 4,900,000 tons of bombs are used in one year on Vietnam, compared to 2,000,000 tons of bombs in all of World War II.

Swartzback stressed that the war will end "only if the government in Saigon agrees to a coalition government with the NLF." He voiced concern about the legitimate problem of granting asylum to any Vietnamese who might feel in personal danger after a U. S. pull-out. Those such as Thieu and Ky with their large bank accounts in Switzerland should not have to face too great a problem, though.

The Presbyterian minister concluded with an appeal to continue this work of peace-making with love. "It is most important not to become bitter, violent or tired." These are the biggest enemies of the work people are trying to accomplish for peace.

Agents of Social Change

The final speaker of the day was Dr. Robert Bonthius, past chairman of Cleveland Area Peace Action Council, and presently a professor at Cast Western Reserve University. He observed that Wooster students were together for a celebration of renewed commitment to end the war. "The day should turn-on thousands of adults who can protest the system from the inside, and thousands of young people who will refuse to fight."

"What a day it would be if we discovered that Nixon was giving a war to which no one was coming," Bonthius quipped.

The forces of change are growing, he said, but so also are the forces of repression of dissent. Dr. Bonthius asked students to "remain cool lest their rights be taken away before they can effect any change." He concluded, "The Moratorium should not be a spasm, or a sigh, or emotionalism, but a life-long commitment on everyone's part."

Students Bring Peace

To Communities

Wooster residents were involved by precinct-to-precinct "leafletting" to promote discussion with citizens with hopes of gathering more non-academic, grassroots support for the Moratorium and the anti-war movement in general. Students were met with varied responses, but for the most part, favorable. A general interest in the activities seemed to be indicated by most Wooster residents.

Nationally, citizens joined with students in expressing their concern about the war policy. Businessmen gathering on Wall Street listened to their own Bill Moyers, former LBJ aide, "troubled by the ambiguities" of our direction and where it will lead us in the 70's. Men and women in homes, labor, and government took to the streets.

Close to 100,000 gathered on the Boston Commons, 75,000 in Cleveland, 50,000 on the grounds of the Washington Monument, and 5,000 in Chicago's Civic Center Plaza.

Congressional leaders spoke out. Senator Edmond Muskie in an address to students at Bates College in Maine called for public discussion and communication. "On the issue of Vietnam, we have much to learn from each other, and we can only learn if we listen to each other. I'm sorry the President has not seen this day as a day to discuss this question in a public forum."

Senator George McGovern leveled what might have been the heaviest attack on the administration's support of the Saigon regime before students at American University (Washington, D. C.): "I ask how long we should support a regime where the number two candidate has been locked up for five years."

Demonstrations often took the form of symbolic gestures. Candlelight processions were numerous. Chicagoans' hopes for peace rose with a white dove freed at a rally on the Civic Center Plaza. Many drew their witness from the nearly 47,000 war dead. Businessmen and secretaries in Washington, D. C., observed 96 seconds of silence; one second for each month of our eight-years in Vietnam.

No immediate assessment of the effect of October 15th can be made. Moratorium leaders observed its effect and participation as, "big... bigger than we thought it would be." Although he offered no statement, President Nixon's recognition of the movement has manifested itself in his determination not to be "affected whatsoever by it," and related gestures as Gen. Hershey's re-assignment and a broadcast to the nation November 3rd. A general air prevails in Washington that the next move is Nixon's.

The architect of the Moratorium, Sam Brown, a Harvard Divinity student, could not make any immediate evaluation. However, "we know we must go on," he stated. "People can't grow weary after one day." Already the movement has developed a base. Looking towards November, Brown noted, "We have to find ways of involving more people."

A 90-minute cycle of several films on Vietnam was shown continuously throughout the day.

FOR PEACE

There was a lot of thought in this town last Wednesday, and an equal amount of frustration. Many people wanted to help but were too busy keeping their families alive. What could they do? At the far left is a (Vietnamese) man before a firing squad.

CIC's Informal Lectures To Offer Breadth Not Credit

In an effort to incite awareness of current local and nation-wide issues and to open up informal discussion about anything relevant to Wooster, the Current Issues Committee has made plans for a series of Noon Time Lectures and informal "Pit Stops."

The Noon Time Lecture Series will present lectures from the area and faculty members, speaking on a wide range of topics. The first week of October brought Mr. Richard Graff, speaking on the Urban Renewal program in the city of Wooster. The lecture was held in Lowry Center, where students went through the cafeteria line and into the flexible dining room to hear the speaker there. This will be standard procedure.

Plans project having these lectures twice a month, with someone from the area speaking every first Wednesday and a faculty member speaking every third Wednesday, at 12 noon. There will be no general theme except the presentation of current interesting issues.

The Pit Stops, to be held in the conversation pit in Lowry Center, with times posted, should be more informal. Though plans call for one meeting a week, it is not a regulated program. The purpose of this is to air any questions about Wooster in all its aspects, and perhaps to propose changes (such as curriculum, housing, etc.).

Generally, someone from the college administration or services will be leading off the discussions. This Sunday, Oct. 19, Dean Lewis will lead a discussion on schools and revolution, which can be general as well as Wooster-directed.

This project may really be creative for those who are interested in airing opinions and seeing some changes on the campus. The CIC welcomes any ideas from students for possible discussion, for both the Noon Time Lectures and the Pit Stops.

Mafia Soap Aired In "The Still Life"

By Charlotte Warren

In response to the ubiquitous demand for graphically realistic radio drama WCWS 91.9FM presents the continuing saga of the Decrepito family in "The Still Life." Telling it like it really was in Chicago during the 1920's the serial recounts the daily traumas and ecstasies of industrious Italian gangster Giorgie Decrepito, owner of the Decripito Family Funeral Parlor.

Reponding to the socio-economic demands of the era Giorgie meets with great success operating a liquor brewing concern behind his regular place of business. This profitable venture in American free enterprise enables him to invite the entire Decrepito clan to leave their native land and humble peasantry to join him in the wealth and wonder of the Melting Pot of the Midwest. Upon this backdrop, richly embroidered with the memories of the Old World and the magic of the New, unfolds a tender tale of tantalizingly tangible true life adventure with a typical immigrant family — Experiencing America.

To achieve the unadulterated authenticity intrinsic to an undertaking of the unfathomable depth and perception of "The Still Life,"

MANY WERE PRAISED in the dedication of Lowry Center on Sunday, but most activities continued with little change.

Draft Poll Shows Students Favor Some Reform Though Lottery Lacking

The Democratic Club has announced the findings of a campus-wide survey in which 24 per cent of the student body replied to a questionnaire sent to all students regarding the military draft. Of the 382 students polled, 294 were men and 188 were women, with the freshmen class providing the largest return of 155 replies.

The eight questions in the survey are part of a state-wide poll of Ohio campuses on the military draft conducted by the Ohio College Democratic Federation.

Wooster students overwhelmingly answered affirmative to two questions. When asked, "Would you favor some changes in the present draft law?", 99 per cent answered yes. The question, "Would you favor immediate Congressional hearings on draft reform?" received 97 per cent yes.

On the questions about deferments, 92 per cent favor continuing undergraduate deferments, with 84 per cent supporting deferments for graduate students.

President Nixon's proposed draft lottery of 19 year-olds was opposed by a majority of Wooster students. When asked, "Would you favor a one year period of draft vulnerability where the youngest would be called at age 19 along with college graduates?", 54 per cent replied no. The question, "Would you favor a national lottery to select draftees at random?", 59 percent said no.

However, two alternatives to the draft did receive clear majorities in the Wooster student opinion poll, the universal service and professional army. When asked, "Would you favor universal service where everyone would be expected to serve his country in the military or other capacities like VISTA or the Peace Corps?", 60 per cent replied yes. The question, "Would you prefer to get away from the draft entirely and depend on an all-volunteer army?" received 58 per cent yes.

In a breakdown of the opinion poll statistics, it was found that more Wooster women than men opposed President Nixon's draft lottery proposal. Of the other alternatives women tended to be more in favor of universal service while more men favored professional army.

Chapel Construction Delayed As City Zoning Laws Argued

By Tom Fitt

Believe it or not, the hole where the chapel used to be — or where the new chapel is going to be, depending on point of view — is making steady progress toward a completion date which now looks to be sometime in December, 1970.

Things were delayed a bit in early September because a power-happy city zoning officer decided that we were building too close to University Street. The law of the city of Wooster (yes, they have such things,) states that all buildings must be at least 60 feet from the street. A fine example of how this law has been enforced is seen in the distance between the road and the foundations of Scovel and Severance. Each of these halls must be a good 20 or 30 feet from University.

So construction was halted for two weeks while Calpin and City Hall argued about who had what right. Galpin proved again that they are overpowering; even the city could not overrule their precise logic.

The College appealed with a three part attack:

(1) University Street is owned and operated by the College of Wooster, today as in the past.

(2) If the parking area on the north side of the street is included in the clearance measurement, there is at least 60 feet from where the chapel rises and where the traffic (?) flows.

(3) The College has other buildings which do not meet the city's requirements. Also, the available space for the new chapel is limited; the site could not be moved any closer to Kauke.

As it is now, you won't need an umbrella when walking between Kauke and Chapel on rainy days.

In the end, the city accepted this argument, and the administration celebrated by having a beer blast on top of one of the bulldozers.

Concrete is being poured now. The complete foundation should be laid by the end of October or the early weeks of November. After the concrete comes the steel. Construction will continue through the winter. The only thing which might slow operations would be unavailability of materials — predominantly steel, which is constantly being effected by strikes and price changes.

We, the Lowry Center Board of Governors, have been concerned about the lack of communication between you, the students, and us. To help solve the problem a Suggestion Box has been placed near Mr. Clossen's office at the east end of the main lounge. Any complaints about Lowry Center ranging from the snack bar to the mail room, dances to movies, will be gratefully accepted. Please put your name on your suggestion or complaint so that if it's necessary we can contact you for your ideas.

"New York Pro Musica" Features Baroque, Elizabethan In Concert

Opening the Student Concert Series this Tuesday will be the New York Pro Musica, a group of 12 musicians returning after four years with music from the renaissance, and baroque periods. The concert will be at Severance (Old Gym) at 8:15 p. m.

In addition to sacred music of the medieval cathedrals the group sings earthy music from Elizabethan England and spirited songs and dances from 15th century Germany. Pro Musica uses a variety of old instruments seldom heard in the se times which include recorders, krummhorns, the sackbut, the tenor viol, rauschpfeife, korthhold, vielle, psalter, regal, organetto, shawn and bagpipe. Of course there is also the harpsicord. These are the original instruments for which the music, performed by Pro Musica was written.

There will be an open reception in Babcock Lounge following the Pro Musica performance. Tickets for the concert are on sale at the Music Department, Lowery Center and Wooster Music Center. This is the first event in the Student Concert Series. Further programs in the Series will include the New York Jazz Sextet, the Rampal-Veyron-La Croix Duo, and Eunice Norton, pianist.

Alumni-Student Talks Flop As Homecoming Nostalgia Reigns

The effort made last Saturday morning to acquaint parents and alumni with current issues on the Wooster campus ought not to have been tried. Well: meaning faculty members and students made themselves available in the L. C. cafeteria at lunch prepared to converse. . . and fewer guests than leaders appeared.

The discussion groups, covering changes in the school's administration and curriculum and the status of a liberal arts education as well as campus dissent, the black community and the value of grades, set themselves up under brightly lettered signs at the noon hour. At least two of the leaders reported good rapport with their student aides.

What was being tried was a repeat of student-faculty discussion groups of last April, which were adjusted successful by all concerned. To attempt another such encounter seemed to the Alumni Department a reasonable idea, except when the multitude of other activities taking place on Homecoming weekend, and the traditionally carefree atmosphere of that institution are considered — and some faculty members feel these might have combined to defeat the purpose. Homecoming, with its nostalgia and football and reunion, affected the results of the groups to indicate a lack of interest on the part of the guests more than a lack of preparation by discussion leaders. One alum at the "Campus Dissent" table was reportedly more interested in dissent in the Class of '24 than in current problems; a topic the Alumni Office had not had in mind.

Amid the celebrations, the event that tired to augur for greater communication between the classes more than any other, folded up to be lost in the shuffle.

Olson And Gould Collections On Exhibit At Art Center

By PHIL GORE

I was conscious that the freeze cometh. I had seen the quick and the dead broken over the mighty shoulders of the abominable snow man in his second coming. As a matter of face, George Olson had painted the blues. I would call his work mystical, if the word were not so unpopular in a rational community such as ours.

The exhibition of Olson's work in printing and painting lies in the old library, a Greek fossil of a building. See if you can enjoy a golden Indian Summer in the midst of Vietnam orchestrated by America, daughter of "God's own junkyard," and view Olson's depiction of our civilization in suspended animation. Question is: now or tomorrow? Of course us white kids come from homes with central heating and that makes us invulnerable. I wonder.

All this clutter of industrialization up for quick sales, states one print, is on the road to the last judgement. We are saturating our atmosphere with stontium 90 (disregarding more familiar industrial fallout) in amounts enough to kill one in 100 babies, writes Esquire magazine. Imagine Olson's picture of the auction store house quite as the time of a plague year. There are no more slaves to auction off.

Sometimes the artist scratches a heaving moon-scape, sometimes a city-scape the color of Egyptian parchment, sometimes an ice beclouded jumble of roofless houses after an earthquake or concussive bomb blast, always uninhabited like the vapor of amnesia. Not all is lost, even though man mechanize himself out of existence and defend his homeland with gothic missile silos, nature could survive. One painting shows a cross section of the place where man, like the mythical dog, buried his brittle bones, crowned with the green and muddy creation of God.

It is important to have this forecast. Not all of us have an inkling of the direction the wind is blowing. Yet, George Olson runs a lonely road envisioning dooms-day. From what I know of him as his next door neighbor, I can vouch for the fact that he is a fine gardener and loves flowers. I would hope his work re-experience Spring.

As to making our landscape livable, there is no time but immediately, or we all suffer like the artist in the chilling of the evening.

The aesthetic distance between that which the mind perceives and what the hand can accomplish has always been a stumbling block to those of us inclined towards art. The drawings of Sybil Gould that are currently on exhibit in the art center demonstrate that Miss Gould minimized that troublesome distance long ago.

Her ability with a simple pencil line is outstanding, even astounding, the simpler her line becomes, the more expression and feeling it seems to pack. Her more complex drawings that involve a certain amount of shading seem to lack some of this expressive quality, that her large portraits and figures contain.

For Sybil Gould the pencil bridges the gap between the mind's perception and the hand's ability. In her drawings of "our Amish neighbors" this consistent ability comes through again. Beyond her sense of technique, however, I am left a bit unsatisfied by these Amish scenes. Her Amish remind me a bit too much of the over simplified sweetness of a child's story book.

The Amish are a hard working and powerfully religious people, as well as the easy-going and slightly old-fashioned people that Miss Gould has shown us. A bit more variety in her comments on these people would have done truer justice to her obvious command of line and form. Through all of her work her sense of design shines through. Too bad that some of it was not more recent.

VOICE OF SPORTS

VOICE Sports Editor

As the Fall sports season nears the halfway mark, two Scot teams find themselves at opposite ends of the success spectrum.

The soccer team, which was winless after three games, now apparently has righted itself and should finish the season strongly.

On the other hand, the football team, which looked promising in the pre-season, finds itself with just one victory in three starts — and must win tomorrow at Denison to avoid what could be a disastrous season.

Let's look first at Coach Bob Nye's booters. The soccer team lost heavily to graduation after a highly successful 1968 season in which the Scots won nine of 11 regular season contests and earned a third straight invitation to the Mid East Regionals.

Those losses forced the Scots to open the 1969 campaign with some inexperienced hands at key positions. In addition, there were rumors of morale problems and the season did not open brightly.

There was the disappointing tie with West Virginia, the loss to Grove City and another hard-fought loss to long-time nemesis Akron.

However, the offense, which had been out to lunch for the first three games, returned and began to click. The defense continued to stay tough and the Scots beat a previously unbeaten Kenyon team, 5-1. Morale rose, the 1968 spirit was back. Consequently, Oberlin had little chance of a victory last Saturday and Wooster won, 3-0. With the triumph over Mt. Union last Tuesday, the Scots are above .500 for the first time this year and, suddenly, the game is fun again — for the players and the fans.

The soccer team now appears capable of an 8-2-1 season. That's not so good as last year, but it just might be good enough for a fourth consecutive trip to the Regionals.

Head football Coach Jack Lengyel does not have such a pleasant prospect facing him these days. Although the football team had most of the regulars back from last year's squad and performed well against Ohio Conference 'toughie' Muskingham a pre-season scrimmage, the 1969 edition of the Scot grid team probably will not achieve another 6-3 record.

Of course, the schedule is tougher than last season (isn't it always?), but the team should be tougher, too. The addition of Albion and Wittenberg to the schedule were good moves on the part of the Athletic Department. By now, after that 1-8 season three years ago, the Scots should be able to play with some of the better football schools.

But the fact remains that in each of these last two 6-3 years, the Scots, with the possible exception of the Denison victory two years ago, have not beaten any team that they should not have beaten. In other words, Wooster has merely defeated the "easier" schools — Oberlin, Hiram, Kenyon — enough times to produce a winning record, but has not pulled any surprising upsets. In order to have a truly outstanding season, one or two upsets are a necessity with our schedule.

The 1969 season has started just like the other two. Wooster lost to Albion in the rain, 13-9. The Scots beat Mt. Union, 10-7, but that was to be expected. And, of course, Ohio Wesleyan downed the Scots, 21-0, last weekend. Albion and Ohio Wesleyan are two of the tougher teams the Scots will face this season and Wooster failed to defeat either one. Will the same be true when Wooster meets Wittenberg and Ashland — the other two tough games on the schedule?

So far, the offense has been the Scots' main problem. Wooster has scored just 19 points in three games, and, though the defense has been good, it shouldn't be expected to shoulder all the burden.

The Scots have been plagued by the inability to score once they get inside the opponents' 10-yard line — and there aren't too many games won just by proving that one can move the ball between the 10's.

Until the Scots pick up on offense, this season looks like a replay of last year's — at best. A 5-4 record this year would be comparable to last season's 6-3. Wooster has five games on its schedule that it should win and four that it should lose. It has already won one of the easy ones and lost two of the tough ones.

Unless there is a surprise hidden in the remaining six games, it would appear that the Scot gridders are on their way to another "ho-hum" winning season.

And, somehow, just doing what everyone expects you to do isn't that exciting.

Duffy's 5 Goals Pace Scots To 7th Consecutive Victory

Karen Duffy scored five goals and Jane Finley added four to lead the unbeaten Wooster women's field hockey team to its seventh straight victory last Saturday, a 16-1 blasting of Heidelberg.

"It was the highest score we've ever had since I've been coaching the team," remarked Wooster coach, Ginny Hunt. "It may very well be the highest score ever in the history of women's field hockey at Wooster."

Helping out with the Wooster offense were Jane Jacobs and Katy Campbell, each of whom tallied three goals, and Libbie Marshall, who had one.

Finley continues to hold the team scoring lead. She now has 13 goals in seven games.

Yesterday, the Scotties faced undefeated (3-0) Muskingum and tomorrow Wooster will host Kent State, a team that has always provided strong opposition. The field hockey game is the only home athletic event tomorrow; you don't have an excuse for not attending.

SCOT STEVE PARKER attempts to pass the ball between two Oberlin defenders to Bob Dow in last Saturday's 3-0 victory over the Yeomen.

NOTH NEARS CAREER GOAL MARK

Dow, Noth Direct Booters To Wins Over Lords, Yeomen

By Dave Berkey

The soccer ball is really rolling at the College of Wooster. Coach Bob Nye's charges shook off a rough start to win two straight games against the foremost teams in the Ohio Conference. After thumping Kenyon, 5-1, the Scots shutout Oberlin, 3-0, and were favored to win last Tuesday's game against Mt. Union.

Tomorrow the booters attempt to continue their winning ways as they travel to Hiram for another OAC game at 2 p. m. The Terriers' visit to Wooster last year for Parents' Day was unpleasant from Hiram's standpoint. The Scots shut them out, 4-0, and outshot the Terriers, 46-6. Hiram has taken it on the chin from Oberlin, Ohio Wesleyan and Kent State thus far in '69.

But in Woosterland every thing has been working well for the soccer team recently. The Scots traveled to Kenyon on a beautiful fall day last week and returned with their first victory and finest offensive display to date. The Lords had been unbeaten and unscored upon in three games before the contest and Wooster's offensive might woke them up to reality.

Bob Dow was the hero for the Scots as he put in the first three goals and assisted on another. Chuck Noth registered the other two while the fine containment defense of the Scots held the Lords in check.

The only Kenyon goal came as a result of a mix-up on signals in the Wooster backfield. The goal tied the score at 1-1 in the second quarter and it gave new life to the spurttering Lords' attack.

The key goal, though, was a solo effort by Dow who passed the Kenyon defensive backfield and beat the goalie. This goal broke the Lords' momentum for good and gave the Scots the lead for good.

The rest of the game was a fine display of Wooster offensive skill in passing and scoring plays. It marked the re-awakening of the Wooster offense which had produced only three goals in the three games to that point. Dow received the coaches' Most Valuable Player award for the Kenyon game.

Last Saturday Wooster evened a number of accounts by beating the Yeomen of Oberlin. The Scots evened the Oberlin series record at 5-5-2. Coach Nye's personal Oberlin record at 2-2-2, and their '69 season record at 2-2-1.

It was all Wooster for 88 minutes as the Yeomen mustered one offensive threat midway through the third quarter. That was stopped cold by the defensive heroics of the Radju-Gulick-Gagen-Caldwell gang. Goalie Caldwell registered his first shutout of the season.

Wooster outshot Oberlin, 28-7, including a 17-1 halftime bulge. One wondered after the game why the score wasn't higher than it was.

Sophomore Bruce Hiller took the spotlight early in the contest as he and his partner on the right side of the line, freshman Jim Broehl, displayed some fancy passing and footwork. They combined on the first Wooster goal as Broehl hit Hiller at midfield with a low pass and the latter sped the entire distance to within 20 yards of the cage. His line drive shot punctured the left side of the net and the Scots were on the scoreboard.

Senior Noth then took over with two goals of his own in the second and third quarters. His first was a head shot off a perfect pass from Grant Underhill and the second was a rebound off a Dow shot that was blocked. Noth finished the game with 28 career goals, one short of the school record held by Stu Miller (1965-68). He was shooting for the record in Tuesday's Mt. Union game and a third straight two-goal game.

Coach Nye looks to this year's team now with high hopes. "We got off to a slower start this year because of the new line-up and offense. Last year we had more seniors and played a more skillful game." The coach went on to say that since the machinery has begun to roll, the Scots soccer team may be hard to stop.

Bishops Hand Scots 21-0 Homecoming Loss

By TOM HILT

The role of "The Spoiler" will be the ambition of The College of Wooster football team tomorrow when the Scots travel to Granville to play in Denison's Homecoming Game.

Last Saturday Ohio Wesleyan was "The Spoiler" in Wooster's 51st Homecoming Game with a 21-0 victory. Wesleyan scored all three of its touchdowns in the first half. Late in the first quarter, the Bishops put together an 81-yard drive in 11 plays. Scoring the touchdown was end Tom Mulligan on a 27-yard passplay from quarterback Tim Flossie.

With 2:15 left in the second quarter, halfback Tom Peyton scampered three yards on a pitchout left to paydirt. This concluded a 51-yard drive of 12 plays.

Still eager to score, the Bishops used a series of timeouts to score a third touchdown. Setting up their final touchdown was a 15-yard punt return by right halfback Tom Liller. This put the ball on the Wooster 37-yard line. The Bishops ate up 37 yards in four plays, including a 27-yard passplay from second string quarterback Steve Chase to Mulligan. The Bishops scored on a six-yard pass from Chase to Mulligan with :10 left in the half.

Tom Burke was three for three in the PAT department for the Bishops.

The Scot defense, led by the return of linebacker Ron Maltarich, toughened up in the second half allowing Wesleyan to cross the 50-yard line only twice.

In the third quarter, the Scot offensive unit put together a strong scoring threat. With a third and goal situation, quarterback Tom Boardman threw a pass intended for wingback Jeff Wise who was all alone in the end zone, but the pass was deflected and fell into the hands of OWU's Steve Yost who returned it to the Wesleyan 10.

With little time remaining, the Scots again threatened to score. Two big plays, a pass interference call and a 41-yard passplay from quarterback Gary Vendemia to end Rick Sollmann, put the ball on the Wesleyan 11-yard line. With one second to go, Vendemia hit Wise at the goal line, but the ball squirted loose to end the game.

Living up to his nickname as the "Greenville Express," Scot tailback Ed Thompson gained 115 yards in 20 carries. His average yardage per game is now 92. Leading rusher for the Bishops was halfback Rich Henley, who carried the ball 30 times for 144 yards.

Teamwise, Ohio Wesleyan held a slight edge over the Scots in statistics. The victors had 20 first downs while the Scots had 13. The Bishops rushed for 204 yards compared to Wooster's 160. The Scots gained 134 yards through the air, while the Bishops gained 118. Canadian Bob Macoritti again was a strong point in the statistics for the Scots with his punting. He punted nine times for 359 yards, an average of 39.9.

"We lost to a very strong football team," reviewed Scot Coach Jack Lengyel following the game. "Our total team execution didn't go well in the first half, but the second half was a completely different story."

"The return of Ron Maltarich in the defense made a real change in our defensive unit," remarked Lengyel. "It seemed to come alive."

Lengyel pointed to back-up quarterback Gary Vendemia as having done a real fine job in the pressure type situation in which he entered the game. Sollmann at end, Bob Reho and Rick Quayle on defense were also bright spots in the game. Lengyel mentioned that Vendemia and Sollmann will both see more action in tomorrow's Denison game.

In scouting that game, we find the Scots in the same position as they were in last season as they were ready to play the Big Red. Denison is again 3-1 as last year and the Scots are 1-2, looking for that big win.

Scouting Coach Marion Zody stated that Denison is always tough on its own turf. The Big Red is a young team with a lot of freshmen, who make "typical" freshman errors. Denison has a real scrambler in quarterback Trevor Young from Massillon. He led the team last year as a freshman. Also back from last year's squad is split end Phil Wince. In the line, Henry Durand could be one of the best guards in the Ohio Conference.

Leading their freshman prospects are wingback Don Faver and tailback Ed Exler.

Their favorite formation is the slot I, and their favorite defense is the Oklahoma — same as the Scots.

Denison opened the season with victories over California State (Pa.), Valaparaíso, and Otterbein, and dropped its first game to Mt. Union, 27-13, last Saturday.

SOPHOMORE RICK SOLLMANN makes a fine catch of a pass thrown by Gary Vendemia near the end of last week's 21-0 Homecoming loss to Ohio Wesleyan. The Vendemia-Sollmann combination almost brought the Scots a touchdown in the fourth quarter.

State Withholds Shack Beer Verdict

Editor's Note: The State Liquor Control Board notified the College Thursday that a vote has been taken on the 3.2 beer permit for the Shack, but the results of that vote will not be released until Nov. 15.

By Norm Mackey

Contrary to popular opinion, the plot on which the Shack stands is not college-owned property but belongs to the Syrios family. Apparently, there is a state or city ordinance which requires that any beer-licensed establishment not be within 500 feet of a school or a church. Still, despite numerous protest letters from the citizenry of this region to the Law and Ordinances Committee of the Wooster City Council, the Syrios' are hopeful that their license will be granted.

The Syrios' hope that the anonymous "Shack rat" will once again be revived. They feel that it was a combination of Lowry Center and the facilities it attracted, and a regular, rowdy group of high school students banging away at the pinball machines which resulted in the Shack's heavy loss of student business.

With some luck and a little open-mindedness on the part of the town and the College the Shack will reopen and once again see some of the "old" liveliness that it once knew. It will not be opened as a public establishment, the Syrios' insist, only as a College hang-out.

The College's present neutrality about the application for beer in the Shack may suggest its ultimate acquiescence on the issue. Surely, with beer at the Shack, student pressure for a "tap" in the Union will be significantly reduced.

Wooster Thinclads Place Second In Triangular Meet

By JIM NELSON

The College of Wooster harriers placed second in the triangular cross country meet held during the College's 51st Homecoming football game last Saturday afternoon.

Gaining the first place wreath was Baldwin-Wallace as the well-balanced Student Princes tallied only 15 points compared to the 60 markers garnered by the Scots. In last place was Central State with 74 points.

Senior co-captain Doug Stoehr was the first to cross the finish stripe for the Scots. Stoehr had a 23:15 clocking which was good for 10th. Next in line for Wooster was freshman Bob Brown who placed 12th.

Others placing high were Moxie Miller at 14th and Dave Pugh at 17th. On the whole the Scots showed considerable improvement over their last outing.

Baldwin-Wallace's Bernard paced the field with a 21:14 time. He was followed by four teammates before an opponent finally out distanced a B-W runner. Top man for Central State was Williams with a 23:03 time that gained sixth.

The improving Scots journey to Muskingum tomorrow and then return home next Saturday to host Wittenberg, Walsh, and Mt. Vernon Nazarene at Parent Day festivities.

Undefeated Sixth Gold Retains IM Grid Lead

The Sixth Gold team, leading the intramural football league with a 3-0 record, won its 11th and 12th straight games over a two-year period, and Sixth's Blue team, the newest member of the circuit, won its first two contests of the season to highlight the first full week of IM play.

Sixth Gold struggled to a 20-12 victory over Second, then downed Fifth, 18-6, last Friday. The Blue squad polished off Seventh, 30-6, and defeated Third, 24-12. Sophomore Mike Milligan had four touchdowns against Seventh and added another in the game with Third to take the league scoring lead with 30 points.

The two Sig teams met today for first place.

In other action last week, Seventh beat Fifth, 18-8, as last year's scoring leader, Bill Hooker, scored three touchdowns.

More On Honor Code

So I have this idea, hopefully thought provoking. An individual who takes on the responsibility of turning in an individual for alleged cheating, should be directly responsible for that student's outcome. At present, the individual is only a policeman and a witness in the case, and he only gives advice for the outcome of the case. He does not have a place on the six man-board and he also has no vote in the decision in the outcome of the case.

Many people will say that this is the way it should be and-or this is the way it's always been in American court of law. Now, if the individual, the third party agrees with the final decision which the board makes concerning the cheating case at hand, then there is no conflict, no friction. However, if the third party does not agree with the final decision of the board, there is nothing which he can do. He has been the policeman, he has carried out the rule or order of the code, he has been a witness in the court case, and he has given advice to the board. This is all. He has not been directly responsible for the outcome of the defendant.

Is this situation acceptable? Many say yes. However, I wish to bring up an example which has plagued a great number of people who have been concerned about and with courts of law. In many situations which came up during the Nuremberg trials after World War II, many German soldiers were held fully responsible for orders which they had to carry out, whether or not they had personally desired to carry them out; these were orders which they had received from a higher order. This example is representative of the individual, the third party, coming into conflict with the system, not being completely protected, and being trapped by something with which he does not agree, but he suffers all the same.

Because this situation is all so real, and can be demonstrated as such all through man's history, with reference to various martyrs, a feeling of unjust, but inscrutable law can be sensed by many people at various times in their lives. This is possibly a plausible reason why people, students at Wooster, do not wish to be held directly responsible for fellow students, without being directly responsible for their fellow students. I hope this last thought is particularly clear. Being held directly responsible for a fellow student means being labled a fink, a rat by the lower social structure of the school, of which we are all a part, and suffering for it.

However, I feel that this more-or-less stale-mated problem has a solution. At present, there is a board of five permanent members, and one non-voting member who carries out preliminary investigations in the case. The five board members are supposedly representative of the whole college, but to the individual student this assumption is utterly nonsensical. Therefore I propose that a board be composed of five regular members, a sixth non-voting member, and a seventh voting member filling a rotating position, rotating with each case to be filled by the individual, the third party, the person having taken on the initial responsibility of turning in the alleged cheater.

I believe that this system could bring about a better cooperation on the part of the entire college, encompassing the feelings of the "individual" and the "system." A system of academic honesty like the one now in existence is a complete failure if there is a lack or partial lack of cooperation, and at present there certainly is. My approach to the problem is extremely unorthodox and ideological, and it may have no practical relevancy for Wooster, but I hope it brings up some questions and thought about the code. Do you care?

Like to spend a weekend finding out about Russia? The Great Lakes Colleges Association has scheduled a Conference November 7 and 8 at Denison featuring Zbigniew Brzezinski, an exciting and informative speaker and world's authority on Russia and the Communist countries.

Other activities, light and heavy, include a report on Oberlin's summer program in Russia and a light show-reading of contemporary Russian poetry at the Bandersnatch, Denison's coffee house. Costs for the weekend will be underwritten by the GLCA Russian Studies program. See Dr. Calhoun for details.

Peace Panel Reaction

To the Editor:

The first part of this was jotted down hastily in the early morning hours of moratorium day. The second part is mostly a quotation from an edict of Emperor Asoka. It came to mind after the afternoon panel session. Having listened to a learned expose on Christian ethics it occurred to me to communicate to you a practical expression of a more simple Buddhist ethic, one particularly appropriate to the topic in hand since Vietnam's population North and South, includes many followers of the Buddhist Dharma, where leaders in large numbers are political prisoners in South Vietnam, their voices silenced by the military leaders of the Saigon government.

For many many years I have been opposed, unremittently opposed to war as a means of solving problems of conflicting interests in human relations.

Someone has said that in war of any kind the first casualty is Truth. Both sides to any conflict, in order to justify themselves in their own eyes and the eyes of the world, slant or distort the reporting of facts so that these will appear to exonerate them from any blame while indicting the enemy, and in fact will prove them to be virtuous in waging war because the other side is evil.

This Vietnam war has been no exception. It has indeed become a sad and glaring example of self-righteous self-justification at the expense of Truth. This is the major tragedy.

To have any self-respecting president of our country characterize our involvement in Vietnam as perhaps our "finest hour" seems unbelievable. This in itself could mark this undeclared, illegal war as our nations most "tragic moment".

To have an outstanding professor of Christian ethics from one of the elite Ivy League universities characterize this war as a Good Samaritanism on a high level would seem to me to be a little short of blasphemy.

At the same time I realize the danger that you and I may be falling into of so embellishing our own motives for opposing this war that we come out of the fray with a clean slate and unsullied record.

So I would speak not in recrimination, but with an accent of self-incrimination. We have all had a part in creating or aggravating this tragedy for we have accepted the position that our nation, especially, has the sovereign right to do as it pleases in the interplay of national interests; that to a large degree our motives and way of life are superior to those of other nations and that we have the automatically sacred right to judge them and condemn them while extolling ourselves.

So in putting in my word unhesitatingly on behalf of this moratorium, I also appeal to you and to myself to recognize, to keep in mind and humbly confess our own failures to work for a broader basis for our human relations and the smugness that faults all our ethical and national judgments.

This in no way lessens my intention to work in any way I can for the prompt cessation of all hostilities and of this tragic crime against mankind.

The Buddhist emperor, Asoka, was a famous warrior who ruled a major part of India from around 268-233 B.C. His conversion to Buddhism led to a revolutionary change in all his attitudes, and especially his views about kingship, conquest and war.

Among many pillar edicts found in all parts of India under his seal there is one that is specially striking because it contains a public confession of guilt on the part of the emperor.

"When the king had been in power eight years he attacked and conquered a large kingdom on the east coast of India; 100,000 of the soldiers of the kingdom of Kahinga were killed, 150,000 people were deported, and many times that number died in the conquest. Then the king began to follow the Buddhist Ethic, the Dharma, the Way of Righteousness. Now he regrets the conquest of Kalinga, for when an independent country is conquered, many people are killed, they die or are deported and that the king finds grievous and painful; even more grievous is that all suffer violence, murder, separation from their loved ones, and are affected by the misfortunes of friends.

"This participation of all men in common suffering is grievous to the King — For all beings the King desires security, calmness of mind and gentleness. He considers that the greatest victory is the victory of Righteousness. This is the only universal conquest, the only one that gives satisfaction." He also expressed the hope that as he was renouncing war, his sons and his grandsons would follow out.

Is this perhaps the only example in the history of mankind of a victorious conqueror at the zenith of his power, still possessing the strength to continue conquests, renouncing terror and violence and turning to peace and non-violence?

Harold B. Smith
